READING WEEK

Reading plays a vital role in exposing a child to a world of words and imagination. The main purpose of reading week is to make students understand the value of reading and to inculcate the reading habit amongst them.

Developing good habits at an early age can help to pave the way for a bright and successful future. There are a lot of things that we do on a day to day basis, but only a few of them stay with us as we grow. Reading is one rich habit that we should develop as this not only adds to our knowledge and enlightens our mind, polish our language skills and vocabulary. "Reading week was a fun week". The purpose of this week was to inculcate students to read books/newspapers. Reading books/newspapers will help them develop literacy skills, love towards books. It will boost their thinking, reasoning, analyzing and judgment abilities. Reading also opens up to new realities. It will help them improve their vocabulary language skills and communication skills. Reading regularly also helps them to master their art of writing, reading will also influence their writing method, expose them to a variety of writing styles, sentence structures and expressions. Reading will also fuel up their imagination and keep the child engaged away from gadgets. Regular reading helps students to become smarter and also improve their brain power. Reading on a regular basis will also promote critical thinking and will improve their speaking skills.

In order to inculcate reading habits in students, the English department of St. Johns International school had organized "Reading Week". All the teachers from grade1 to grade9 conducted reading classes in their respective language periods, wherein they explained students how to read a book/newspaper and at the end of the week each student read the newspaper/book independently with voice modulations and gestures. A few students wore costumes during the activity students portrayed their creativity through the costumes made from newspapers. Overall the entire week was fun and amazing. Students showed their enthusiasm through active participation throughout the week.
